19 MBTI of KMLAians

EDITOR'S NOTE

Dear Reader,

Throughout the years I've spent in KMLA, I've always wondered about the indifference of KMLAians towards the school press. On one hand, it seems like students should be eager to learn about their community and share their perspectives. On the other hand, it's understandable that prolonged editing and outdated articles may not intrigue busy KMLAians. Handling this problem, this edition of Minjok Herald seeks to be timely by including some very fresh articles in the Editorial section and the Feature section.

In the news section, we recall the most basic school events that struggled to face the new era of COVID. We focused on many changes we met on the verge of quarantine. Now, we live in a new school with new systems introduced to meet the protocols of social distancing policies. For 25th and 26th wavers unfamiliar with KMLA during "normal" times, the parties with masks on or the entrance ceremony attended by only a sprinkling of people might seem like the "new normal," as it was; but it is a significant change compared to 26 years of a less hindered KMLA.

The editorial section tackles the election problems of KMLA, which had always been issued. Each semester, the school newspaper clubs form a 'Press' group to inform students about the student council elections. However, each year apathy prevails, as most students are unwilling to read the articles for each candidate or simply lack interest in the election process itself. 'Election, is it a Showcase for Democracy?' closely observes the problem. The Daejabo issue and personal thoughts on COVID-based changes are also dealt with.

The most intriguing and exciting topic of all, MBTI, is the topic of the 65th Feature section. Many students are obsessed with all MBTI issues, but nobody asks for the teacher's MBTI. Minjok Herald surveyed some teacher's MBTI and interviewed them. Check out their MBTI and empathize with their stories regarding their personality types.

KMLA is changing. In some ways, it might even be improving. In others, there is more room for improvement. These changes might either be active or passive, like COVID itself. The changes might remain even as the pandemic fades; or they might also fade. We hope the changes we are recording here within this edition of the Minjok Herald may somehow help future KMLAians.

Due to COVID-19, many changes have occurred within many sections of society - be it daily life, medical care, or the economy. Education is no exception. The Ministry of Education took measures to provide online classes. Following these policies, KMLA was quick and comprehensive in adopting Zoom.

Zoom, an online video communicating service, generally replaced the rolling hills and busy hallways for KMLA students. According to the class schedule, students would now access the teacher's conference room rather than enter through a door in person. Zoom has a chat function that helps students and teachers communicate and a screen share function enabling students to present and teachers to share class materials. It also has a small group discussion function that facilitates group activities.

First, teaching methods changed. Online classes are different from offline classes in many ways. Instead of reading textbooks, teachers share pdf files and proceed together. 12th grader Kim Sang-Yoon says it was easier to follow AP United States History class using the pdf file on the screen instead of textbooks. He pointed out that he could look at the highlighted section when he lost track with the class.

The presentations of students also went through many changes. Although it is possible to share the screen with others, it wasn't as practical as offline classes. Of course, some students view the changes positively. 11th grader Song Jung-Hoon says he felt comfortable not having to present in front of others while participating in online classes.

Despite some struggles, students and teachers have done well with the online classes throughout the year. However, if the pandemic continues, we must think about the quality of classes and the ways to improve it.

Due to the COVID-19 outbreak, the school had to make many changes, especially the events and schedules for the incoming 26th wavers. Traditionally, the school offered prospective students a campus tour, but instead, the 30th Student Council decided to provide a virtual tour using the ever-growing YouTube.
The opening of our school's YouTube channel marks our school's formal adjustment to the life trends of the 21st century. The video, which lasts about twenty minutes, features teachers and students of KMLA. Two teachers - Mr. Yang Dong-Hyuk and Mr. Oh Byeong-Moon, participated in its creation. The video contains short clips showing students' daily lives. There is no doubt that this video will help prospective students to see our school community in a different light.
Here is an interview with Mr. Yang Dong-Hyuk sharing the behind story of creating the channel and speculating on its future uses.

Good afternoon. Would you please introduce yourself?
Mr. Yang: Good afternoon. I'm Mr. Yang Dong-Hyuk. (laughs) I teach Physics here at KMLA.

You have privately created several opening videos for your classes for the students. Could you tell us what made you want to create those videos in the first place?
Mr. Yang: When I first started teaching at KMLA on Zoom, there were several problems. I hoped students would be tempted to get to class earlier by producing these videos in a TV show-type manner. At first, it was difficult for me to convey my messages through the platform, but the more I worked on it, the easier it became.

Now, those are the videos that you made for the students. What about the virtual tour video that was officially released on the official channel? Why did you decide to do this?
Mr. Yang: Well, I guess the students wanted me to be a part of it because they knew I was already familiar with the whole process, thanks to my opening videos. It was a great opportunity, and I thoroughly enjoyed it.

About the KMLA YouTube channel, what do you think about its future possibilities?
Mr. Yang: Well, I think there are two ways to use it. First, it will prove helpful for promoting the school. One of the channels that I'm watching right now is ChungTV, a channel that promotes the city of Chungju. The channel boasts such a big audience because it is entertaining, and that's what videos should be: fun. Second, I want the channel to be a way for the students of KMLA to demonstrate their talents. We have so many gifted students who will shine if given a proper chance.

Our school is often mislabeled as "old-fashioned." Do you think we could utilize this channel to change some of those misconceptions?
Mr. Yang: Well, I think that's exactly what the start of KMLA's YouTube means. It is the embracing of a new age, and I welcome it! For some of my classes, I have used the Internet for virtual communication. Such an approach is all the more needed.

Do you have any remarks to add?
Mr. Yang: It is challenging to keep up with such fast technological developments. The older I get, the more difficult it becomes. In addition, the reception of technology differs from person to person, so some teachers opt not to use media in their classes. Therefore, I think adopting a new media is not necessarily a technology issue; it also concerns the quality of the class.
In this time of such uncertainty, it becomes even more vital for both students and teachers to come together. Technology can help us, and KMLA has decided to provide a platform where students can create videos together. With the efforts of both KMLAians and staff, the platform is expected to bring about a real change - whether it be to promote the school or to showcase a variety of the students' talents.

25TH ENTRANCE CEREMONY

Unlike previous years, March 1, 2020, had to endure an empty school. Instead, the 25th Entrance Ceremony was held on November 6, 2020. 25th wavers could finally participate in many activities, such as reciting the school's motto and the purpose of EOP, and experiencing the "Candlelight Ceremony."

Though the ceremony seemed to be working well, some aspects of it had to be canceled, such as reciting the declaration of the Samil Independence Movement, introducing the history of KMLA, etc. In addition, only one parent per student was allowed to attend, and senior students could not greet 25th wavers due to the social quarantine rules regarding COVID.

One of the event's most critical sections was the 'Candlelight Ceremony.' Students were each given candles with 'Korean Minjok Leadership Academy' engraved on them as they marched with them in their grasp. The headmaster explained the meaning of the candles: we should sacrifice ourselves to make a better world as the candles burn their bodies to light their surroundings. The 'Candlelight Ceremony' allowed students to reflect on themselves and think about their attitude towards their future lives.

The Samulnori performances of Samuchim and Dachita followed. 25th waver Kwon Ye-won recalls, "I really enjoyed Samuchim's performance because I felt that it was very grand and welcoming. I also liked how Dachita blew the trumpet themselves during the silent tribute. However, I think the Opening Parade of the Ceremonial Group was the best part of all because they opened the door for the Entrance Ceremony."

Not only for students, but the late entrance ceremony was also an extraordinary experience for the teachers too. Mr. Yang Dong Hyuk comments, "Whereas the students were excited and busy taking pictures and didn't listen to my directions, parents followed my instructions well. I felt that they had high expectations of KMLA. I understood that each student is a precious and beloved child for them. I should love and care for them more. It's my first time in KMLA. So I don't know very much about the original ceremonies. I heard that COVID-19 caused many events to be canceled. Anyway, I came to KMLA together with you guys. Let's have fun together!"

Despite all difficulties, students could take a lot of pictures and had a great time congratulating each other. The Entrance Ceremony will last as one of the most important memories for the 25th wavers.

The student council election is one of the most critical events in Korean Minjok Leadership Academy. The process elects the members of the student council, who will represent the school and the students. Due to COVID-19 issues, the 30th student council election was done online, using the website provided by the National Election Commission. Not only the election itself, but other election processes were mostly held online too. Hence, the election scene was quite different from past elections.

As this was our second online election (the 29th Student Council election being the first), the process was conducted quite smoothly. However, some dissatisfaction was expressed towards the question-and-answer sessions. Because students stayed home, it was impossible to hold a live session. Hence only the previous council members and Press could participate. So the election commission recorded it for students. However, it was prolonged due to many candidates. An unexpected prolonged session is not entirely new, as several previous elections show; but for future elections, it will be better if the council either plans an extended question-and-answer session or enforces the schedule strictly.

Since the election took place in the middle of COVID-19, one of the main issues throughout the question-and-answer session was how to handle the situation. For the Judicial Council, the candidates mainly agreed that it was impossible to continue the school court as usual. As alternatives, suggestions like conducting the court via written documents or setting up an online court were made. The candidates of the Legislative Council said that they would emphasize online communication with the school and students. The candidates of the Executive Council stated that they would look for a way to work online and keep important events going.

Another notable point of the election was the changing role of the Press. Compared to past elections, the Press produced more reports on the candidate assignments and question-and-answer sessions. The Press also intensified the fact-checking system, playing a more critical role in helping the voters decide.

Due to COVID-19, the election for the 30th Student Council had many incidents. Still, the process was completed quite smoothly. Despite some shortcomings, the process, as a whole, was not bad and gave us hope.

What is Daejabo? · · ·

WHAT IS DAEJABO?

Often used by college students, hand-written posters provide a medium for activists to point out social problems on a single wide sheet of paper. Resistance groups and activists have mainly used them to criticize government policies or rulings by a judicial court publicly. In Korea, such posters are called Daejabo.

Actually, the word 'Daejabo' originates from China. After founding the People's Republic of China, several entities put up posters for public propaganda. They were large-sized posters in large letters to impress the public and were booted to the wall. This is called 'Dazibao' in Chinese, and it was prevalent in China's modern history in the early and mid-80s. I think the Chinese Dazibao inspired the Korean Daejabo.

Globally, hand-written posters are often used in movements for student rights. In KMLA, we also find Daejabos posted. Are there any legal grounds for putting them up? In 2018, the National Human Rights Commission of Korea once used the term 'violation of freedom of expression' in response to the banning of hand-written posters in schools. The principal of a middle school in Gangwon Province refused to allow displaying a hand-written poster on campus. The National Human Rights Commission of Korea (NHRC) criticized, "It is an exercise of freedom of expression for students to post posters in schools, and it is a restriction on students' basic rights for the school not to allow them to do so." NHRC also pointed out that the right to post posters must be officially guaranteed because students' opinions matter and need to be fully reflected.

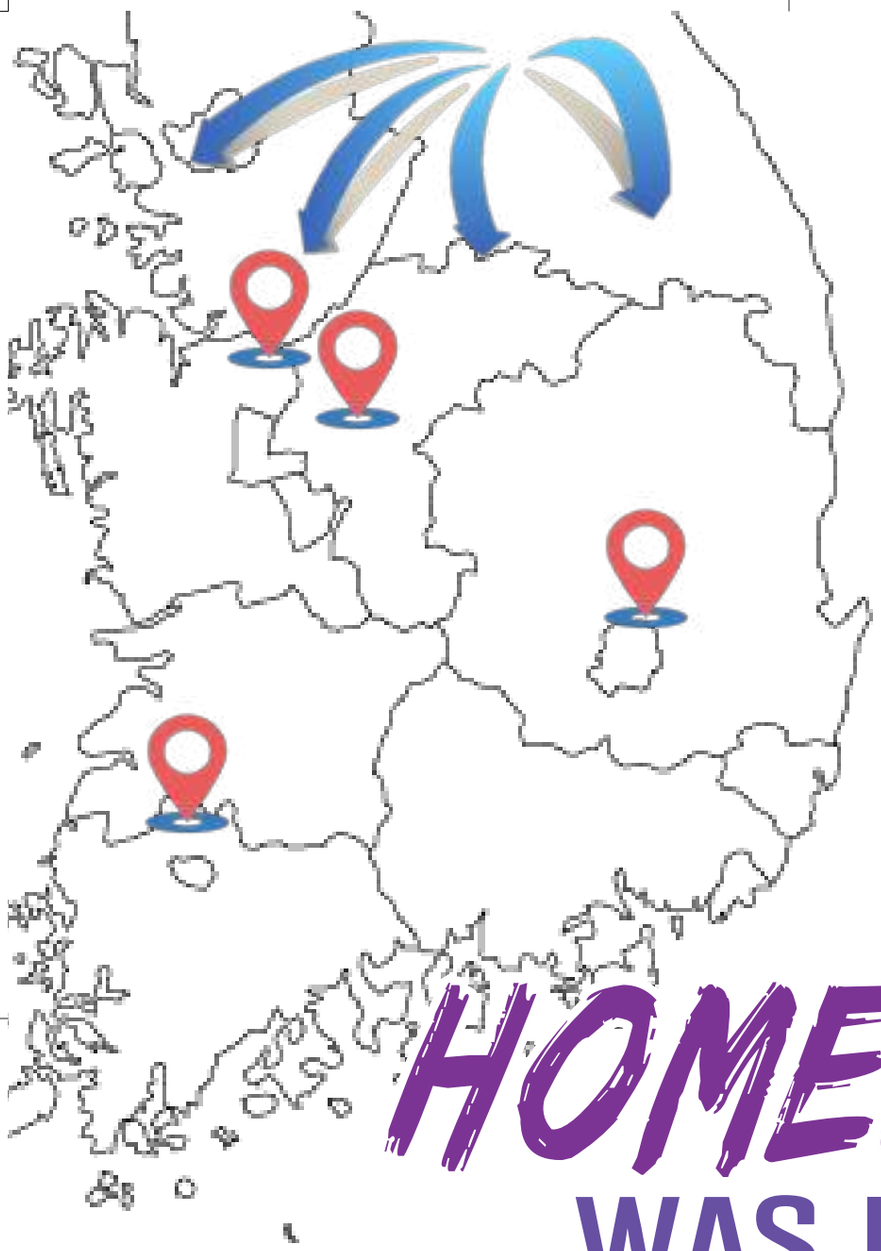

There were several cases when hand-written posters were displayed in KMLA. When the previous principal Cheong Jean-gon blocked students from participating in candlelight protests in 2016, students planned to hang a Daejabo. However, he retired before it actually happened. In addition, when the 21st wavers were in school, they posted a hand-written poster claiming the equality of school uniforms for men and women. The 'KMLA Uniform Change Regiment,' which asserts to allow boys wearing girl's school uniforms and girls wearing boy's school uniforms, seemed to have been promoted at that time. Since then, the 'KMLA School Uniform Selection Committee' has been established and improved various school uniform suggestions of students.

So, in the case of KMLA, how are the school regulations written about school posters? According to the KMLA Regulation Book on October 20, 2020, a total of two pages were found in the search results of 'Publishing Materials.' The first page was written about the 'procedure of publication,' which states in Section 1 that it is a regulation for all school publications issued by KMLA. The second is what is said in Chapter 6, 'Student.'

> Article 57 (Student's Duty)
> 1.Students shall comply with the regulations, such as school regulations, and shall not engage in activities that violate the educational purpose and individual or collective acts that interfere with the performance of the school's original functions, such as classes and research. 2. Student organizations, such as student councils, must comply with the provisions of paragraph 1 in hosting rallies and events.
>
> Article 58 (publishing)
> The publication, distribution, and publication of student publications shall be subject to prior permission from the principal.

However, many students feel that the school did not properly consider the limits of 'Daejabo' publication regulations. It is understood that the school unilaterally notified the students of the change in the school's name and that it did not gather opinions from faculty members or communicate with students. It was inevitable that students failed to go through the approval process of the 'school principal.' It was practically difficult for students to suggest that they attach hand-written posters to those who decided to change the school's name. A hand-written sign is a tool of change when used well, but it can be an illegal post that violates others' rights or fame if misused. I hope you think about the students' right to self-expression and its consequence.

HOMESTUCK WAS IT ALL BAD?

Prolonged and frequent quarantines this year deprived us of many things that would be considered ordinary just a year ago. Despite many disappointed faces, some claim that being stuck at home had its advantages. When asked if it "was all that bad," they answer "No."

Unlike in the dorm, students did not have to stand forever in queues because of the school's social distancing policies. Intensive management periods would leave students in endless lines for something as basic as dinner. We did not have to suffer from such inconveniences when we were at home. Think of how many meaningful things you could have achieved during that wasted time!

Furthermore, at home, we had immediate access to anything we needed. It is fascinating how quickly things can arrive effortlessly at your door with just a few taps on your phone. In the dorm, however, this process can take ages, and waiting is exhausting. Quick and easy access to online stores and restaurants is a blessing. And let's not forget - we could choose our daily menus according to our mood.

Finally, and most importantly, we had overall freedom in managing our time and lifestyle. For example, we had more choices for fashion. Unlike offline classes in the school, Zoom classes do not oblige us to wear school uniforms. the whole day. Also, we did not have to care about cleaning violations and subsequent penalty points. We could take full control over our daily time management. Flexible study and rest with our computers on the bed without any penalty point anxieties! Don't you miss the comfort we enjoyed back then?

My point is that we are better off looking at the bright side of our lives rather than grumbling over what we lost. Although we are all disappointed, staying home was not entirely bad. Being home-stuck is a double-edged sword. What matters is how we look at it.

NOW WITH

COVID-19

The virus that causes COVID-19 is a novel coronavirus, first identified during an investigation in Wuhan, China. The pandemic dramatically changed our daily life, impacting schools. How are we now responding to this pandemic?

During 2020, KMLA students and teachers have been using Zoom for classes and various school events like the Q&A sessions of the student council, advisor time during exam periods, MPT, school club meetings, lectures by famous authorities, and KMLA alumni.

KMLA also imposed new rules as a response to COVID-19. Students were required to return to the dorm separately. Teachers and students must wear a mask all the time (also in the dorm) except when "eating." Parents were not allowed to enter the dorm on moving days. Honjeong was done separately for each floor, whereas before COVID-19, it was held collectively. The use of the cafeteria for purposes other than having meals was prohibited. The arrangement of chairs was changed. "Written" courts began to replace face-to-face courts. They were required to check their body temperature twice or more.

School events were canceled or delayed, and school activities were put under strict restrictions.

Despite all these changes and modifications in school policies and regulations, KMLA did not wholly sacrifice efficiency. KMLA quickly adopted Zoom classes, far faster than other schools in the country. Thus, this provided students with high-quality education programs during the pandemic. Whereas other high schools usually provided one-way classes, the classes in KMLA were interactive. Moreover, KMLA used COVID-19 as a chance to build a platform for remote classes. In the future, KMLA can organize lectures even by the instructors who cannot easily come because they live away from KMLA.

Regarding KMLA's new rules, policies, and regulations, it is indeed questionable whether they will provide sufficient protection in KMLA as a boarding school. Indeed, doing something must be better than doing nothing. The regulations currently being executed prevent a large number of students from gathering. We are now living with COVID. The policies might last longer and keep students alerted to the threat of COVID-19. Nevertheless, the increased restrictions signify the reduced freedom of students. Of course, It is a matter of debate which you prefer. Personal freedom? Or safety?

DREAMS BEYOND NATIONAL BORDERS

The COVID-19 pandemic is changing our lifestyles and modes of social interaction. COVID-19 seems to change the educational landscape for students worldwide drastically. Amidst others, changes to the college admission process are still causing trouble for high school students.

The topmost concern: how far will the changes be, and how long will they stay? Students and counselors expect that colleges will rely more on their schools' reputations, which could be an advantage for KMLA students. There are some reasons for this change.

Without ACT and SAT scores, the points from official tests are deemed unreliable. These tests have been canceled for thousands of students, forcing more than 500 colleges to temporarily stop asking for test scores. These test scores are vital to the evaluation of applicants.

SAT/ACT scores help colleges fairly evaluate many students from diverse backgrounds. Without any of these scores, how can a college evaluate students from unfamiliar backgrounds? Along with these issues, the AP (Advanced Placement) tests taken by millions of students in 2020 have been considered problematic due to poor internet access for many students. The potential for open cheating was also regarded as troublesome. Therefore, colleges have been looking for alternatives that may signify more attention to the student's activities or other reliable evaluation sources. Still, considering the time limit of this year's admission cycle, it is likely that a school's reputation and its past acceptance records will have more weight than in normal years.

Finally, there will also be a change regarding student GPA in the admission process. Grades and the curriculum level are two of the most important criteria. Specifically, spring-semester grades may be missing in many applications because many schools in the US switched to a pass/fail grading system during the height of the pandemic. This makes evaluating talented, hard-working students difficult. Therefore, colleges might lay more value on extracurricular activities. The sufficient time and effort invested may help their decision.

So, don't worry, KMLAians! While the pandemic may be a mentally and physically challenging period for all, colleges will focus on how you worked through this challenging period. So keep reaching for your goals and build up a character of your own.

IS IT A SHOWCASE OF DEMOCRACY?

ELECTION

Here is an old riddle; What can blossom in a showcase? The answer is elections. Elections are often called "the Blossom of Democracy," but also "Showcase for Democracy" by pessimists. The student council elections in KMLA are designated similarly. Voters' indifference, bureaucratism, and ignorance of student autonomy are often pointed out as the problems of student council elections.

Every voter is provided with generous information about the candidates, including public promises and visions for student councils' mission. Question-and-answer sessions are held two times, which all freshmen and juniors are mandated to attend. Last but not least, the Press even publishes several articles and fact-sheets within fact-checks. However, many students still seem to persist in basing their decisions on the opinions of fellow students or personal feelings.

One of the causes for this gap between expectation and reality is the flaw in the information provision process. Many students have pointed out that question-and-answer sessions are not listener-friendly. 24th waver Kim Ji-Hyeok points out, "There is no way other than the question-and-answer sessions to know about candidates. However, the sessions are beyond students' concentration span." The concentration problem on voters' side got worse in the Zoom question-and-answer sessions, which were introduced last year. Many claim they had "important work to do at that time," such as preparation for upcoming quizzes, or they "could not stand sitting in front of their laptops doing nothing else other than paying attention to the events."

Not only are question-and-answer sessions problems, but transmitting information about elections is overall inconvenient. The problem can be summarized in three points: the space where the information is posted, the arrangement of information, and its availability.

Information related to the election is uploaded separately into several platforms. KMLA Online and the Facebook' KMLA 전체공지' group are used to post info concerning the election. However, students rarely check KMLA Online, and keeping track of all posts regarding the election is impossible. The arrangement of information has also been considered a problem. There is no visual source from which students can briefly be informed about what each candidate has claimed. The Press distributed fact sheets, but they were still too 'wordy' to attract students' attention. The absence of offline notifications also contributed to students' lack of information. Those who have been ignorant of the Q&A sessions and the online posts had not got a single piece of election information. The only information they received was the fact sheet on the dormitory lobby walls.

What some voters are demanding is to change the information provision system. To prevent the election from becoming bureaucratic, the Commission and Press should consider the 'listeners.' It might be crucial to consider how to induce the electorates to pay more attention to the process overall.

However, the most crucial point is to reflect upon the reason for voters' indifference. Here is a point for comparison with the election in real-life politics. 24th waver Heo Won-Jun said, "It is not easy for one to pay attention to the elections if it is not connected to his or her interest." The tiny but significant difference between the election in real-life and KMLA is this: most students know only vaguely or do not know how this election could change their lives. Tax rates or welfare policies in real life directly influence our lives, but the changes made by the student councils are often invisible. This is why some students keep grumbling that the Legislative Council is neglecting its duty. How could one become serious and choose carefully when they think those members have nothing to do with them?

To return to "the Blossom of Democracy," at least one thing is crystal clear. The students must play the lead role in this play named election. Still, many of us are not fully aware of it. To make our election blossom, the Commission, the Press, and the students must find ways to make the voters the center of the elections. That is "the Blossom" indeed.

MBTI

The Myers-Briggs Type Indicator (MBTI) is an introspective self-report questionnaire indicating differing psychological preferences in how people perceive the world and make decisions. The test attempts to assign four categories: introversion or extraversion, sensing or intuition, thinking or feeling, judging or perceiving. One letter from each category is taken to produce a four-letter test result, like "INFJ" or "ENFP". 16 personalities are there for the results.

Myers–Briggs Type Indicator (MBTI) is an introspective self-report questionnaire indicating differing psychological preferences in how people perceive the world and make decisions. The test attempts to assign four categories: introversion or extraversion, sensing or intuition, thinking or feeling, judging or perceiving. One letter from each class is taken to produce a four-letter test result, like "INFJ" or "ENFP." Sixteen personalities are there for the results.
To simply explain, extroverts enjoy expressing in words, experiencing external stimuli, and revealing themselves. Having many thoughts and feeling more comfortable expressing in writing than in words, they prefer understanding and thinking before acting. By contrast, introverts tend to focus more on their inner self and enjoy quiet and internal activities.

Sensory-intuitive indicators concern whether you rely more on senses or intuition when perceiving surroundings like people and objects. Sensitive people generally rely on the five senses and tend to focus on the present. On the other hand, intuitive people are imaginative and creative and rely on their sixth sense rather than impressions.

Accident-emotional indicators tell you which you prefer, either thinking or feeling when judging and making decisions based on the information you collect. Thought-type people pay attention to objective facts and try to judge analytically. Fairness is an essential value, and principles and norms are important. However, emotional people value relationships and dislike being bound by principles. They focus on the emotional aspects and emphasize the effects of their action on people than logical judgments or principles.

The judgment-recognition index concerns your preference over judgment and recognition when dealing with real-life problems. The "judgment" people want to make quick, reasonable, and right decisions. They have a clear sense of purpose and tend to act systemically and systematically. Perceptual people are more likely to work according to the situation than those of the judgment type and have a stronger desire for adventure or change. They are curious about everything and tend to act flexibly depending on the situation.

[Naver Knowledge Encyclopedia] MBTI [Myers-Briggs Type Indicator] (psychological glossary, 2014; 4).

We wondered how well the MBTI test tells us about our teachers. So we planned a few steps. We interviewed Mr. Lee Yejoon, one of the most popular Korean teachers of KMLA, and Mr. Shin Seungkeun, the chemistry teacher with a charismatic personality.
First, before asking the teachers about their MBTIs, we guessed it based on our experiences. For example, Mr. Lee is always very calm, so he is likely to be an introvert. Then we asked the teachers about their MBTI. Mr. Lee told us that he was an INFJ. INFJ (introverted, intuitive, feeling, and judging) is sometimes referred to as the "Advocate" or the "Idealist"; people with INFJ personalities are creative, gentle, and caring. INFJs are usually reserved but highly sensitive to how others feel. They have high moral standards and a strong focus on the future. INFJs enjoy thinking about serious topics like the meaning of life. The INFJ type is one of the rarest (1 ~ 3 percent of the population).

For Mr. Shin, we prepared nine questions for each alphabet and asked him to answer the questions, which were a total of 36.

For E or I, he got E for 6:3. Among the choices that he was given, he chose the most close-to-self descriptions. Three of them were: 'I think lots of times before I behave,' 'I only answer when someone asks me something (Do not initiate a conversation),' 'It makes me a little bit uncomfortable to go somewhere I am not used to.'

For S or N, he got S for 9:0. For T or F, he got T for 6:3. So we could find out that he has a gentle and mild nature and strongly sympathizes with people.
For J or P, he got J for 8:1. He only got one description referring to 'P,' showing that he doesn't care much if his shoes or clothes wear out quickly.

These results concluded that Mr. Shin's MBTI is ESTJ or' Executives.' People of this type are extroverted, observant, thinking, and judging. They possess great fortitude, certainly following their judgment. They often serve as a stabilizing force in a group and can offer solid direction amid adversity. A famous example is John D. Rockefeller.

Following is the interview made with Mr. Shin and Mr. Lee.

SEUNG KEUN

YE JOON

What is your favorite subject and why? (except for your major)

Mr. Shin: Of Course Chemistry! (the interviewer asks for another subject, since Chemistry is his major) Mathematics, because it has the exact answer.
Mr. Lee: Korean, because I am a 'literature boy'.

What is your favorite novel or movie? Why?

Mr. Shin: The movie <Friend> because it is about '의리'!!
Mr. Lee: I love dramas. Romantic ones are my favorite.

When you work, do you be flexible or be F.M.?

Mr. Shin: Be flexible! Because I can ask for help from someone. My motto in life is 'Do not make enemies'.
Mr. Lee: Flexible.

Will you eat 혼정빵 even if you have to walk up to the 12th floor?

Mr. Shin: Going up the 12th floor can also be kind of an exercise! Eat 혼정빵 and exercise as well.
Mr. Lee: I would eat it. I'm an imperfect perfectionist.

How will you react if a subject that you've desperately wanted is not held?

Mr. Shin: I will first ask the teacher to open the class, but I'll understand if the teacher is too busy.
Mr. Lee: I would ask my teacher. My tuition is valuable.

How often will you do your laundry? Do you think you'll be able to do laundry on the exact day?

Mr. Shin: It will be a little bit difficult for me to do it every time. I might do it at once.
Mr. Lee: Of course, laundries are important.

How will you react to an immense range of tests?

Mr. Shin: I don't have any complaints since the range will be immense for everyone.
Mr. Lee: I will soothe my sorrow and study.

How do you plan for your study?

Mr. Shin: I wrote down what to do as the amount since I do not sleep until I finish it. For mathematics and science, I studied them every day.
Mr. Lee: I always set a plan. I like everything set up.

Which type of test do you prefer as a student and a teacher, multiple-choice, short answer, essay question?

Mr. Shin: I like multiple choice questions since I study natural science. Also, it is easy to grade.
Mr. Lee: I like short answer questions. Multiple choice questions are unfriendly.

We have thus investigated Mr. Shin Seungkeun and Mr. Lee Yejoon's MBTIs, and how they will react to some situations that can be given to KMLA students. Some students may have the same MBTI as the teachers, and others may have MBTI that overlaps only partly or is different. No matter your MBTI, your answers to our questions will not be 100 percent fit with the teachers'. MBTI may be fun and partly helpful to understand someone, but it is hazardous to literally 'trust' the MBTI and have preconceptions toward someone. Think about teachers' images in your mind, and think if they fit their MBTIs. And it will be easy to see that there are differences. About 7.7 billion people are living on this Earth, but there are only 16 MBTI personalities. In the youtube video, a psychiatrist says that they do not learn MBTI. All these prove that MBTI must be regarded as material for fun. I hope that you enjoyed our article.

Lee DaYeon, Choi HeeYeon

Since he has been a first-year advisor for six consecutive years, everyone in our school knows Mr. Kim Tae-wan. As popular as he is, there are many students curious about his MBTI. According to a survey of about 40 KMLA students, the teacher's MBTI was expected to be ENTJ (Engaging Mobilizers). From the way he teaches, students speculated that he would be extroverted. Also, he was expected to have strength in intuitive thinking, reasoning, and balanced judgment.
When we visited his office to check, Mr. Kim said he knew MBTI but never tried it himself. Below is an interview between him and the Minjok Herald.

Kim MinSeo, Bae SeoYeon

Is he extroverted or introverted? (E / I)

Do you lead the conversation when you are with your colleagues?

Mr. Kim: I think that depends on who my conversation partner is.

Do you suppress or express your anger?

Mr. Kim: This also depends on the situation. I keep it in my mind when I get angry with the students, but I usually say it right away in other cases.

Do you prefer working alone to teaching students?

Mr. Kim: I prefer class time.

Summing up his answers, we expected him to be more extroverted, but he kept insisting that he is an introverted person.

Is he sensitive or intuitive? (S / N)

Do you tend to see the entire forest or just one tree?

Mr. Kim: Just looking at my teaching method, I think I am a person who tries to see the whole forest. I don't teach everything in a textbook. I only teach students what I think is important. I often jokingly say that I don't understand textbooks very well, but that's really because I don't read them well (laughter).

He seemed to be more intuitive than sensitive, according to his response.

Is he a judger or perceiver? (J / P)

Do you make a plan when you have something to do?

Mr. Kim: Actually, I have worked hard preparing for classes, but it's getting harsher these days. Maybe it's because I'm getting older. Or it's just because I don't want to do it. I used to plan every day and follow this, but recently I feel a bit behind schedule. Still, I prepare and plan for classes, like planning how many books to read for this week's lessons. Otherwise, the classes won't go well.

After more discussion with the teacher, we concluded that he is probably more a perceiver than a judger.

Is he a thinker or feeler? (T / F)

Do you try to be emotional when dealing with students, or do you try to be rational?

Mr. Kim: When I do my work, I approach it rationally. But when in class, I seem to emphasize emotions. I try to focus on each student.

Since he says he tries to give attention to all students sincerely, we believed that he is closer to a feeler than a thinker.

After a short conversation about MBTI, we turned to his experiences as the teacher of KMLA.

What is the most memorable episode of your school life?

Mr. Kim: There are many memorable episodes, but two episodes made me decide to teach harder in this school. When I first came to this school, I did a morning session. The students were frequently dozing. It was a day of an event to award citations to those who have worked for ten years. All the cooks and cleaners who had worked for a long time at our school were invited and introduced to the podium. Suddenly, all the sleeping students jumped up and gave a standing ovation with bright eyes. I was very impressed by their actions. The KMLA students were different from what the rumors outside had suggested about them.

The second episode was with 18th wave students. When they graduated, they all went up to the cafeteria and expressed their gratitude to the workers. They thanked them for making their meals for three years and gave them a huge applause. And the workers cried. I think I will never forget that scene, which touched me deeply. Then, I made up my mind to do more than transmit some knowledge about history to these great students while teaching at this school. The two experiences made me stay here and do my best to teach students. Meanwhile, KMLA changed a lot, but the memories are still alive.

In this episode, we were able to glimpse the teacher's value on his job and personality.

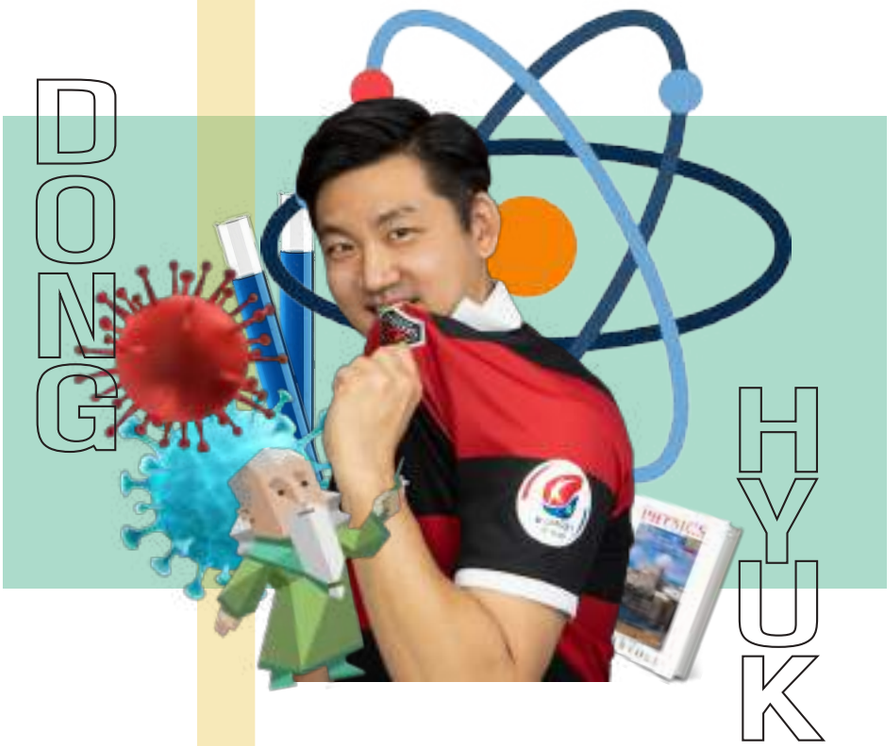

What personality do you think is most needed in your profession?

Mr. Kim: I think the ability to empathize with other people is the most important. I make efforts to listen to my students carefully and sympathetically even when I cannot fully agree with them and provide solutions to their problems.

How do you react to the students behaving wrong?

Mr. Kim: I think it's okay because they are students. Making mistakes is a students' privilege. So I just try to listen to them and take care of them. I think this is what I have to do.

Through the teacher's interview, we were able to find that his warm personality played a significant role for all juniors in our school. Perhaps it is the power that sustains our school. Although MBTI is a good indicator, it does not means our personality itself. Like Mr. Kim, please do not forget that we all have more than 16 MBTI colors.

The INFJ is defined as having introverted, intuitive feeling and judging traits. This combination makes these personalities stand out uniquely with a quiet, moral version of humanism. They think and feel with a depth that brings challenges as well as opportunities.
INFJ is the rarest personality type of all. They have a deep sense of idealism and integrity, but they are not idle dreamers – they take concrete steps to realize their goals and make a lasting impact. Still, they leave their mark on the world.
Advocates' unique combination of personality traits makes them complex and quite versatile. For example, INFJ can speak with great passion and conviction, especially when standing up for their ideals. At other times, however, they may choose to be soft-spoken and understated, preferring to keep the peace rather than challenge others.

How accurately do you think the MBTI result reflects personality?

Mr. Yang: Many people ask me whether I am more of an extroverted person. To be honest, I consider myself more of an introvert. People see me as an extroverted person because I am a teacher and sometimes pretend to be extroverted in front of students. But I am very silent and enjoy being alone. Considering each of the characteristics of INFJ, I think it suits me quite well.

What do you think is your personality's strength and weakness?

Mr. Yang: First, when I see an evident problem, I feel an urge to fix it. Nowadays, I am stuck with the issue of making students follow the social distancing regulations. I detect new problems and somehow make changes. An example would be making sure students return to their dormitories safely and following the rules after school. But that could also be a problem because I tend to tire myself out by doing so.
When I was a student, I used to be quiet and did not stand up for any issues. But as a teacher now, I make more efforts to solve problems in school just like many civil rights advocates of INFJ personality did.

As a KMLA teacher, what is your ultimate goal?

Mr. Yang: As a physics teacher, the biggest challenge is that many students find physics hard. I believe it is my mission to make students get closer to the subject. Students mustn't turn their backs on physics because they deal with issues and problems fundamental to other studies. So, my ultimate goal is not to make my students win the Nobel Prize but to become friends with physics.

What makes your lessons unique and distinguished from other teachers? What are some characteristics of your class?

Mr. Yang: When I was a student, I often questioned, 'Why am I learning this?' As a teacher, I try to help the students understand the importance of what they are learning. Of course, not everything that we learn at school is valuable and decisive. However, I still want to persuade my students that all knowledge matters and may be helpful at one point in life.

Bae SuYeon

ESFJ is a partner and friendship model; do you think it suits you?

Park: Yes, I tend to get along well with everyone, including juniors, seniors, and friends. I value more cooperation with others than charismatic leadership.

Were there any school activities related to your MBTI?

Park: I would say the time working at the executive council expresses me and my MBTI precisely. When I was a member of the 28th council, the relationship with all other members (Yeon-Seo, Seung-Hyo, Ji-Sun, Myeong-Ji) was very horizontal. There were no barriers between us, which allowed all of us to rely more readily on each other. In all cases, we worked closely together and made one team.

I think I endeavor to be as close as possible to others in our 29th executive council too. In the first meeting of the executive council, the first words were something like, "Regard as a friend!" My principle is that a horizontal rather than vertical relationship among the members is essential for an effective and proper working group.

In your positions as the President of the Executive Council or as the chief in the Department of School Event Management, have you ever exposed your characteristics openly?

Park: As the head of the department, I have nothing to say yet. As I did in the executive council, I wanted to have a friendly relationship with all the 25th wave members. For instance, I try to approach them and have small talks. Probably such efforts account for why my close juniors are all from the department.

ESFJs are conscientious helpers, sensitive to the needs of others, and energetically dedicated to their responsibilities. They are highly attuned to their emotional environment and attentive to both the feelings of others and the perception others have of them. ESFJs like a sense of harmony and cooperation around them and are eager to please and provide.
ESFJs value loyalty and tradition and usually put their family and friends as their top priority. They are generous with their time, effort, and emotions. They often take on the concerns of others as if they were their own and will attempt to put organizational talents to use to bring order to other people's lives.
